La Tomatina is a festival that is held in the Valencian town of Buñol, a town located 30 km inland from the Mediterranean Sea in which participants throw tomatoes and get involved in this tomato fight purely for fun. It is held on the last Wednesday of August, during the week of festivities of Buñol

At around 10 AM, festivities begin with the first event of the Tomatina. It is the "palo jabón", similar to the greasy pole. The goal is to climb a greased pole with a ham on top. As this happens, the crowd work into a frenzy of singing and dancing while being showered in water from hoses. Once someone is able to drop the ham off the pole, the start signal for the tomato fight is given by firing the water shot in the air and trucks make their entry.

The background is a dense crowd of people, and the foreground shows people with their faces and clothes covered in tomato pulp. The overall atmosphere is festive and chaotic.

History

La Tomatina has been a major tradition in Bunol since the mid 1940's. It remains unknown as to how this tradition started. Common theories include a casual local food fight among friends, a class war among juveniles, and a joke on an untalented musician. A very popular theory among many was that it started as a result of unhappy citizens of Bunol throwing tomatoes at councilmen during a town celebration. But regardless of what actually started it, it was so enjoyable that it continued for years and years to come. La Tomatina was put on a brief hiatus during the Spanish State period when former president Francisco Franco banned it due to it having no religious significance. However, the festival returned after Franco's death in 1975. The festival is held in honor of Bunol's patron saints Luis Bertran and the Mare de Deu dels Desemparats.

A photograph capturing a moment from the La Tomatina festival. A woman is lying on her back on a ground completely covered in a thick layer of red tomato pulp. She has a joyful expression, with her eyes closed and a smile. Her hair and clothing are also covered in the pulp. In the background, other participants are visible, some sitting on the ground, all amidst the sea of red. The scene is vibrant and chaotic, typical of the festival's atmosphere.
